WHY YOU'LL NEVER LICK A STAMP AGAIN!!!

This story is a true story reported on CNN.

A woman was working in a post office in California. One day she licked the envelopes and postage stamps instead of using a sponge. That very day the lady found a cut on her tongue.

A couple of days later, her tongue started to swell and it began to get really sore. She went to the hospital where the doctor took an x-ray of her tongue and noticed a lump, so he prepared her for minor surgery. When the doctor cut her tongue open, a live cockroach crawled out!!!!

There were cockroach eggs on the seal of the envelope, and the egg was able to hatch inside her tongue because of her saliva, as it was warm and moist.

Cockroaches are said to eat the glue used on envelopes and stamps. So using a Franking Machine may be the safer option.
